UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT
NORTHERN DISTRICT OF CALIFORNIA

DENNIS JOSEPH RAIMONDO, et al.,

Plaintiffs,

v.

FEDERAL BUREAU OF INVESTIGATION,

Defendant.

Case No. 13-cv-02295-JSC

ORDER RE: CROSS-MOTIONS FOR SUMMARY JUDGMENT

Re: Dkt. Nos. 69, 82

Plaintiffs Dennis Raimondo and Eric Garris bring claims under the Freedom of Information Act and the Privacy Act against Defendant the Federal Bureau of Investigation (“FBI”). Plaintiffs seek records regarding a 2004 threat assessment the FBI conducted of a website, Antiwar.com, with which the Plaintiffs are affiliated, and related investigations that the FBI conducted of Plaintiffs. Plaintiffs also seek expungement of certain records related to the exercise of their First Amendment rights, and Plaintiff Garris seeks expungement of a record that admittedly contains inaccurate information. Now pending before the Court are the parties’ cross-motions for summary judgment.¹ (Dkt. Nos. 69 & 82.)

BACKGROUND

In August of 2011, Raimondo and Garris discovered that they and the website,

¹ Both parties have consented to the jurisdiction of a magistrate judge pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 636(c). (Dkt. Nos. 8 & 11.)

1 Antiwar.com, had been subject to FBI surveillance. (Dkt. No. 28-1 ¶ 15.)² In particular, Plaintiffs 2 discovered a heavily redacted FBI memorandum from April 30, 2004 (“April 30 Memo”) which 3 suggested that the FBI had conducted a threat assessment of Antiwar.com “an anti-interventionist 4 website that publishes news and opinion articles regarding U.S. foreign and military policy.” (Id.
 5 ¶ 2.) Garris is the founder, managing editor, and webmaster of Antiwar.com, and Raimondo is the 6 editorial director. (Id. ¶¶ 8-9.) Plaintiffs contend that the FBI initiated investigations into each of 7 them based on First Amendment protected speech activity which was memorialized in the April 8 30 Memo. (Id. ¶ 3.)

9 1. Plaintiffs’ Freedom of Information Act and Privacy Act Requests

10 In October 2011, Plaintiffs separately filed Freedom of Information Act (“FOIA”) and 11 Privacy Act requests (collectively known as “FOIPA requests”) seeking disclosure of records 12 maintained by the FBI regarding themselves. (Dkt. No. 71 at ¶ 7.) The FBI responded a month 13 later in separate form letters stating that it had been unable to identify main file records responsive 14 to Plaintiffs’ requests in its Central Records System. (Id. ¶ 8.) Over the course of the next year, 15 Plaintiffs, through counsel, pursued various administrative appeals and challenges to the FBI’s 16 denial of their FOIPA requests. (Id. ¶¶ 9-11.) In particular, in a May 24, 2012 letter, Plaintiffs 17 requested additional information and clarification regarding seven FOIPA requests explaining that 18 “[e]ach of the original requests sought files about each requester and specified the requester’s 19 connection to the online magazine Antiwar.com. As such, the FBI needed to search for records 20 related to Antiwar.com in order to determine whether there were responsive records for the 21 requesters” and suggesting that additional records related to Raimondo, Garris and Antiwar.com 22 existed in light of the April 30 Memo. (Id. ¶ 12.) The May 24 letter also provided Raimondo and 23 Garris’s full legal names. (Id. ¶ 13.)

24 The FBI thereafter reopened Plaintiffs’ FOIPA requests and assigned the request for 25 records regarding Antiwar.com a separate FOIPA number. (Id. ¶ 14.) On November 9, 2012, the 26 FBI notified Plaintiffs that their FOIPA requests were being administratively closed and

27

 ECF-generated page numbers at the top of the documents.

1 consolidated with Plaintiffs' request regarding Antiwar.com. (Id. ¶ 17.)

2 2. This Lawsuit and Plaintiffs' Request Under the Privacy Act Section 552a

3 In May 2013, Plaintiffs filed this action seeking disclosure of documents pursuant to FOIA 4 and the Privacy Act. That same day, Plaintiffs separately filed requests with the FBI seeking 5 expungement of all records maintained by the FBI that describe each Plaintiff's exercise of First 6 Amendment rights. (Id. at ¶ 103; Dkt. No. 78 at 18.) In August 2013, the FBI responded that 7 maintenance of records regarding Plaintiffs was proper under Section 552a(j)(2) of the Privacy 8 Act. (Dkt. No. 71 at ¶ 40; Dkt. No. 78 at 25.) Plaintiffs filed a timely appeal of this decision and 9 the FBI responded nearly a year later that because the matter was subject to judicial review the 10 appeal had been administratively closed. (Dkt. No. 71 at ¶¶ 105-106; Dkt. No. 78 at 27.) Around 11 the same time Plaintiffs appealed the denial of the expungement request, Plaintiffs submitted 12 requests pursuant to Privacy Act Sections 552a(d)(2) and 552a(e)(7) seeking amendment of any 13 records that pertain to Garris or Raimondo that are inaccurate, irrelevant, untimely, or incomplete.
14 (Dkt. No. 71 at ¶¶ 107-108; 112-113.) The FBI denied the request as to Raimondo, but issued an 15 Electronic Communication ("EC") with respect to Garris. (Id. at ¶¶ 109-110; 115-116; Dkt. No.
16 71-4 at 20.) Plaintiff Garris appealed this action on the grounds that the EC falls short of the 17 necessary corrective action. (Id. at ¶ 117.) The FBI denied the appeal because the matter was 18 currently subject to judicial review. (Id. at ¶ 118.)

19 Plaintiffs thereafter filed the operative First Amended Complaint alleging four claims for 20 relief, including the two previously pled claims under FOIA and the Privacy Act for failure to 21 promptly and properly disclose documents in response to Plaintiffs' FOIAP requests, and two new 22 claims under the Privacy Act. (Dkt. No. 28-1, FAC.) The new Privacy Act claims are brought 23 pursuant to Section 552a(e)(7) which provides that an agency shall not maintain "any record 24 describing how any individual exercises rights guaranteed by the First Amendment unless 25 expressly authorized by statute or by the individual about whom the record is maintained or unless 26 pertinent to and within the scope of an authorized law enforcement activity," and under Section 27 552a(d)(2) challenging the FBI's maintenance of records which are inaccurate, untimely, 28 irrelevant, or incomplete, respectively. (Id. at ¶¶ 86-83.)

1 Because this case includes both FOIA and Privacy Act claims, the parties conducted some 2 discovery prior to submission of the now pending cross-motions for summary judgment.

3 3. The FBI's Document Production

4 Five months after this lawsuit was filed, the FBI made its first interim release of records.
5 Having reviewed 170 pages, the FBI released in full or part 47 pages and withheld others under 6 Privacy Act Exemption (j)(2) and FOIA Exemptions 1, 3, 4, 6, 7(A), 7(C), 7(D) and 7(E). (Dkt.
7 No. 71 at ¶ 20.) This production included a less redacted version of the previously discovered 8 April 30 Memo as well as 11 of the Memo's enclosures, a memo from September 18, 1972 (the 9 "September 1972 Memo") which references Plaintiff Garris (Id. at ¶ 119-122), and a July 29, 2004
10 memo from the San Francisco FBI Field Office declining to initiate a preliminary investigation 11 into Plaintiffs (the "July 2004 Memo"), (Id. at ¶ 20, n.8; Dkt. No. 73-5.).

12 The FBI made a second interim release of records the following month: of the 54 pages 13 reviewed, the FBI released 36 in whole or part and withheld certain other information pursuant to 14 the same FOIA exemptions previously asserted. (Id. at ¶ 21.) Three months later, the FBI made 15 its third and final interim release of records. Having reviewed another 69 pages, the FBI released 16 50 pages in full or part and withheld certain information pursuant to the same FOIA exemptions.
17 (Id. at ¶ 22.) In January 2014, the FBI provided Plaintiffs with a description of the search 18 conducted in response to Plaintiffs' FOIPA requests and provided an initial Vaughn index. (Id. at ¶ 19 24.) In total, the FBI has identified 290 responsive pages of records: of these, 26 pages have been 20 released in full, 104 pages were released in part, 117 pages were withheld in full, and 43 pages
21 were withheld in full as duplicates. (Id. at ¶ 4.)

22 EVIDENTIARY OBJECTIONS

23 As a preliminary matter, the Court must address Plaintiffs' objections to the two 24 declarations the FBI submitted in support of its motion for summary judgment.

25 1. The Campi Declaration

26 The FBI submitted the Declaration of Andrew Campi who is the Assistant Special Agent 27 in Charge of the FBI's Newark Field Office. (Dkt. No. 70.) Plaintiffs object to those portions of 28 the Campi Declaration which discuss the April 30 Memo because Campi has no personal

1 knowledge of the memo or its attachments—he was not stationed in Newark at the time it was 2 prepared and attests that his knowledge is based on “his experience and review of information 3 provided to me in the course of my official duties, including the April 30 2004 EC and the 4 attachments thereto.” (Id. at ¶ 3.)

5 The FBI counters that personal knowledge can come from review of the contents of agency 6 files and records and that as the Assistant Special Agent in charge of the Newark office Campi has 7 knowledge to testify regarding the AG guidelines, the procedure regarding development of ECs 8 and the attachments thereto, any further investigative activity into Plaintiffs, and the extent to 9 which the April 30 Memo is relevant to ongoing and future activity.

10 Campi has adequate personal knowledge to address these matters. As a general matter in 11 FOIA cases, “[a]n affidavit from an agency employee responsible for supervising a FOIA search is 12 all that is needed to satisfy the personal knowledge requirement of Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 13 56(e).” Lahr v. National Transp. Safety Bd., 569 F.3d 964, 989 (9th Cir. 2009). Courts routinely 14 deny hearsay and lack of personal knowledge objections in FOIA cases based on agency affidavits 15 similar to those submitted here. See, e.g., Our Children's Earth Found. v. Nat'l Marine Fisheries
16 Serv., No. 14-1130 SC, 2015 WL 6331268, at *2 (N.D. Cal. Oct. 21, 2015) (overruling hearsay 17 and personal knowledge objections with respect to a declaration submitted by the agency’s San 18 Francisco Branch Chief); Hersh & Hersh v. U.S. Dep’t of Health & Human Servs., No. C 06-19 4234, 2008 WL 901539, at *4 (N.D. Cal. Mar. 31, 2008) (same with respect to a declaration 20 submitted by the Health and Human Services FOIA officer). The same rationale applies equally 21 here notwithstanding Plaintiffs’ assertion of Privacy Act claims in addition to the FOIA claims.

22 Plaintiffs’ objections to the Campi Declaration are therefore overruled.

23 2. Hardy Declaration

24 Plaintiffs also object to the Declaration of David M. Hardy, the Section Chief of the FBI’s 25 Record/Dissemination Section, Records Management Division in Winchester Virginia. Mr. Hardy 26 has submitted a lengthy declaration primarily addressing the FBI’s claims of exemptions under 27 FOIA and the Privacy Act, and attaching the Vaughn Index. (Dtk. No. 71.) In particular, 28 Plaintiffs object to Hardy’s statements regarding the September 1972 Memo as not based on his 1 personal knowledge.

2 Plaintiffs' objections to the Hardy Declaration are overruled for the same reason their 3 objections to the Campi Declaration are overruled. See Council on Am.-Islamic Relations,
4 California v. F.B.I., 749 F. Supp. 2d 1104, 1119 (S.D. Cal. 2010) (overruling objections to a 5 declaration from David Hardy in a FOIA case).

6 DISCUSSION

7 Plaintiffs' claims are divisible into three categories: (1) Plaintiffs' disclosure claims under 8 FOIA, Section 552(a)(3), (a)(6), and under the Privacy Act, Sections 552a(d)(1), (g)(1)(B), (g)(3); 9 (2) Plaintiffs' Privacy Act claim based on retention of documents reflecting Plaintiffs' exercise of 10 their First Amendment Rights under Sections 552a(e)(7), (d), (g)(1)(A), (D), (g)(2)(A); and (3)
11 Plaintiff Garris's Privacy Act claim based on maintenance of inaccurate records under Sections 12 552a(d), (e)(1) and (5), (g)(1)(A), (g)(2)(A).

13 I. Plaintiffs' Disclosure Claims

14 The FOIA calls for "broad disclosure of Government records." CIA v. Sims, 471 U.S. 159, 15 166 (1985). To ensure broad disclosure, the FOIA "gives individuals a judicially-enforceable 16 right of access to government agency documents." Lion Raisins v. Dep't of Agric., 354 F.3d 1072, 17 1079 (9th Cir. 2004); 5 U.S.C. § 552. The FOIA specifically provides, in relevant part, that:

18 "each agency, upon any request for records which (i) reasonably describes such records and (ii) is 19 made in accordance with published rules stating the time, place, fees (if any), and procedures to be 20 followed, shall make the records promptly available to any person." 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(3)(A).

21 There is a strong presumption in favor of disclosure. See U.S. Dep't of State v. Ray, 502 U.S. 164, 22 173 (1991). This "general philosophy of full agency disclosure [applies] unless information is 23 exempted under clearly delineated statutory language." John Doe Agency v. John Doe Corp., 493 24 U.S. 146, 151-52 (1989) (quotation marks and citation omitted). These exemptions "must be 25 narrowly construed." John Doe Agency, 493 U.S. at 154. "[L]ike FOIA, the Privacy Act provides 26 for a cause of action to compel compliance under Section 552a(1)." Mobley v. C.I.A., 806 27 F.3d 568, 586 (D.C. Cir. 2015).

28 The government agency bears the burden to prove a particular document or redaction falls

1 within one of the nine statutory exemptions from disclosure. Ray, 502 U.S. at 173; Lahr v. NTSB, 2 569 F.3d 964, 973 (9th Cir. 2009); see also Chambers v. U.S. Dep't of Interior, 568 F.3d 998,
3 1003 (D.C. Cir. 2009)(noting that the burden is on the government in both FOIA and Privacy Act 4 cases to demonstrate that it acted in accordance with the applicable statute). The government may 5 rely on affidavits to satisfy its burden of demonstrating that an exemption applies, but the 6 affidavits must contain “reasonably detailed descriptions of the documents and allege facts
7 sufficient to establish an exemption.” Kamman v. IRS, 56 F.3d 46, 48 (9th Cir. 1995) (quoting
8 Lewis v. IRS, 823 F.2d 375, 378 (9th Cir. 1987)); see also Shannahan v. IRS, 672 F.3d 1142, 1148 9 (9th Cir. 2012) (“To justify withholding, the government must provide tailored reasons in response 10 to a FOIA request. It may not respond with boilerplate or conclusory statements.”); Church of 11 Scientology v. Dep't of the Army, 611 F.2d 738, 742 (9th Cir. 1980) (noting that the government 12 “may not rely on conclusory and generalized allegations of exemptions”); Chambers, 568 F.3d at 13 1003 (“the court may rely on a reasonably detailed affidavit” in reviewing a Privacy Act 14 disclosure claim). “[S]ummary judgment on the basis of such agency affidavits is warranted if the 15 affidavits describe the documents and the justifications for nondisclosure with reasonably specific 16 detail, demonstrate that the information withheld logically falls within the claimed exemption, and 17 are not controverted by either contrary evidence in the record nor by evidence of agency bad 18 faith.” Military Audit Project v. Casey, 656 F.2d 724, 738 (D.C. Cir. 1981).

19 Even if an exemption applies, an agency may only withhold the information to which the 20 exemption applies. Yonemoto v. Dep't of Veterans Affairs, 686 F.3d 681, 688 (9th Cir. 2012).
21 The agency is therefore required to provide all “reasonably segregable” portions of the records to 22 the requester. 5 U.S.C. § 552(b). “The burden is on the agency to establish that all reasonably 23 segregable portions of a document have been segregated and disclosed.” Pac. Fisheries, Inc. v.
24 United States, 539 F.3d 1143, 148 (9th Cir. 2008). “To meet its burden in this regard, the agency 25 must provide[] a detailed justification and not just conclusory statements.” ACLU of N. Cal. v.
26 FBI, No. C 12-03728 SI, 2014 WL 4629110, at *3 (N.D. Cal. Sept. 16, 2014) (internal quotation 27 marks and citation omitted). In contrast, under the Privacy Act, the head of the agency can exempt 28 an entire system of records from disclosure, but only where they meet certain criteria. See 5

1 U.S.C. § 552a(j)-(k); see also Mobley, 806 F.3d at 586 (discussing requirements for claiming 2 exemption under subsection (j)).

3 In response to Plaintiffs' FOIA and Privacy Act requests, the FBI has asserted certain 4 statutory exemptions. For purposes of their FOIA disclosure claim, Plaintiffs only challenge one 5 category of exemptions—those under Exemption 7.³ Plaintiffs contend that the same arguments 6 apply with respect their claim for disclosure under the Privacy Act, Section 552a(d)(1), because 7 the Privacy Act exemption claimed by the FBI only applies if the documents are withheld for a 8 law enforcement purpose, which mirrors the Exemption 7 standard.⁴ The Court's analysis of the 9 disclosure claim thus focuses on the FOIA claim, but applies equally to the Privacy Act disclosure 10 claim. See News-Press v. U.S. Dep't of Homeland Sec., 489 F.3d 1173, 1189 (11th Cir. 2007)
11 (“The net effect of the interaction between the two statutes is that where the FOIA requires 12 disclosure, the Privacy Act will not stand in its way, but where the FOIA would permit 13 withholding under an exemption, the Privacy Act makes such withholding mandatory upon the 14 agency.”).

15 A. Exemption 7, Law Enforcement Objective

16 Exemption 7 permits the government to withhold “records or information compiled for law 17 enforcement purposes” under certain enumerated conditions. 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(7). Here, the FBI

18
19 ³ Plaintiffs do not contest the FBI's claim of Exemptions 1, 3, or 4. Plaintiffs also challenge 20 Exemption 6, but the FBI has asserted Exemption 6 in conjunction with its assertion of Exemption 21 7(C) and the Court thus analyzes it under 7(C).

22 ⁴ The FBI contends that the records are exempt from disclosure under Section 552a(j)(2) which 23 states the agency head may exempt records from disclosure if they are 24 maintained by an agency or component thereof which performs as 25 its principal function any activity pertaining to the enforcement of 26 criminal laws ... and which consists of (A) information compiled for 27 the purpose of identifying individual criminal offenders and alleged 28 offenders and consisting only of identifying data and notations of arrests, the nature and disposition of criminal charges, sentencing, confinement, release, and parole and probation status; (B)

information compiled for the purpose of a criminal investigation, including reports of informants and investigators, and associated with an identifiable individual; or (C) reports identifiable to an individual compiled at any stage of the process of enforcement of the criminal laws from arrest or indictment through release from supervision.

1 has divided the withheld or redacted documents into four categories: A through D as described in 2 the Hardy Declaration. (Dkt. No. 71 at ¶¶ 67-100.) Category A documents discuss the threat 3 assessment (Id. at ¶¶ 67-79), Category B documents are records in pending FBI investigations of 4 third parties which mention Plaintiffs and/or Antiwar.com (Id. at ¶¶ 80-95), Category C 5 documents detail the status of FBI investigations into third party subjects which mention Plaintiffs 6 and/or Antiwar.com (Id. at ¶¶ 96-99), and Category D documents are complaint forms and 7 communications that reference Plaintiff Garris. (Id. at ¶¶ 100.) Plaintiffs contend that the 8 Category A documents were not compiled for a law enforcement purpose and therefore Exemption 9 7 does not apply. Their argument that the Category B, C and D documents have not been 10 described with sufficiently particularity and were not reasonably segregated and therefore any 11 claimed exemption should be rejected is discussed infra at Section I.A.3.

12 1. Rationale Nexus Test

13 “An agency which has a clear law enforcement mandate, such as the FBI, need only 14 establish a rational nexus between enforcement of a federal law and the document for which an 15 exemption is claimed.” Church of Scientology, 611 F.2d at 748 (internal quotation marks 16 omitted). “The rational nexus test requires courts to accord a degree of deference to a law 17 enforcement agency’s decisions to investigate.” Rosenfeld v. U.S. Dep’t of Justice, 57 F.3d 803, 18 808 (9th Cir. 1995). However, “generalized monitoring and information-gathering” do not suffice 19 for Exemption 7. Id. at 809. Moreover, “[i]nformation need not have been originally compiled for 20 law enforcement purposes in order to qualify for the ‘law enforcement’ exemption, so long as it 21 was compiled for law enforcement purposes at the time the FOIA request was made.” Lion 22 Raisins, 354 F.3d at 1082 (citing John Doe Agency, 493 U.S. at 155).

23 The FBI has failed to satisfy its threshold burden of demonstrating a rational nexus 24 between a legitimate law enforcement purpose and the withheld documents. The Hardy 25 declaration attests that the records were

26 compiled for a myriad of law enforcement and national security 27 investigative purposes, including but not limited to, investigations 28 concerning civil rights matters and violent criminal threats, domestic terrorism investigations, international terrorism investigations, and counterintelligence investigations.

1 (Dkt. No. 71 at ¶ 49.) This description is inadequate.⁵ In Wiener v. F.B.I., 943 F.2d 972, 985 (9th
 2 Cir. 1991), the court held that the FBI had failed to establish a rational nexus between law 3 enforcement and the at-issue documents because citation to “[t]he Civil Obedience Act and the 4 Anti-Riot Act [which] are very broad criminal statutes, prohibiting a wide variety of conduct” 5 “d[id] little to inform Wiener of the claimed law enforcement purpose underlying the 6 investigation” and without “further details of the kinds of criminal activity of which John Lennon
 7 was allegedly suspected, Wiener cannot effectively argue that the claimed law enforcement 8 purpose was in fact a pretext.” Id. at 986; see also Am. Civil Liberties Union of N. California v.
 9 Fed. Bureau of Investigation, No. 10-CV-03759-RS, 2015 WL 1346680, at *4 (N.D. Cal. Mar. 23, 10 2015) (concluding that the FBI failed to establish a rational nexus because its pleadings did not 11 “tether the activities the withheld documents concern to the enforcement of any particular law.”); 12 Am. Civil Liberties Union v. Fed. Bureau of Investigation, No. C 12-03728 SI, 2013 WL 3346845, 13 at *6 (N.D. Cal. July 1, 2013) (concluding that the FBI failed to establish a rationale nexus where 14 “the FBI refers only vaguely to ‘crimes’ and ‘federal laws,’ but does not cite the specific laws that 15 it was enforcing.”).

16 The same is true here. The FBI’s vague reference to everything from “civil rights matters” 17 to “violent criminal threat, domestic terrorism investigations, international terrorism 18 investigations, and counterintelligence investigations” does not adequately identify a law 19 enforcement objective which justifies withholding under Exemption 7. For this reason alone, 20 Defendant’s motion for summary judgment as to Exemption 7 and the related Privacy Act 21 violation must be denied.

22 2. Specific Exemptions Claimed

23 a) Exemption 7(A)

24 Exemption 7(A) provides that “records or information compiled for law enforcement 25

26 ⁵ The justification for the Privacy Act exemption in the Hardy Declaration is similarly vague and 27 inadequate: “the responsive records were compiled in the course of the FBI’s investigation into 28 alleged criminal wrongdoing by third parties and national security investigations, including assessments carried out to detect, obtain information about, or prevent or protect against federal crimes or national security threats.” (Dkt. No. 71 at ¶ 39.)

1 purposes” may be withheld if they “could reasonably be expected to interfere with enforcement
2 proceedings.” 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(7). The FBI has asserted Exemption 7(A) to categorically shield 3 the names, identifying information of or activities of third party subjects, and the file numbers of 4 pending FBI investigations. (Dkt. No. 71 at ¶ 50.) Plaintiffs challenge the FBI’s assertion of 5 Exemption A with respect to the April 30 Memo.⁶ In particular, Plaintiffs contend that the FBI 6 has failed to show that release of this information (minus the file numbers) could shed light on an 7 ongoing investigation given that the Memo is nearly 12 years old.

8 The FBI contends that revealing information regarding the third party suspects “could 9 result in not only []the acknowledgment of the existence of the investigation but also in the 10 identification of suspects and thus jeopardize the investigation.” This does not explain “how 11 releasing each of the withheld documents would interfere with the government’s ongoing criminal 12 investigation.” Lion Raisins v. U.S. Dep’t of Agric., 354 F.3d 1072, 1084 (9th Cir. 2004) 13 (emphasis added). As in ACLU v. FBI, No. C 12-03728 SI, 2013 WL 3346845, at *7 (N.D. Cal.
14 July 1, 2013), the FBI’s conclusory statement that revealing the information could jeopardize an 15 investigation is insufficient to invoke Exemption A. Id. (concluding that the court “cannot make 16 an assessment of the FBI’s claim without any basis other than the FBI’s bald assertion.”). The 17 FBI’s assertions must be sufficiently specific to allow Plaintiffs and the Court to evaluate the 18 claimed exemption. See Wiener, 943 F.2d at 985-86.

19 The Court thus concludes that the FBI’s declaration is insufficient to allow withholding 20 under Exemption 7(A) as to information in the April 30 Memo regarding third party subjects.

21 b) Exemption 7(C)

22 Exemption 6 and Exemption 7(C) both exempt the release of records which would 23 constitute an “unwarranted invasion of personal privacy.” 5 U.S.C. §§ 552(b)(6), (b)(7)(C).
24 Exemption 6 covers “personnel and medical files and similar files,” and only allows withholding 25 files the disclosure of which “would constitute a clearly unwarranted invasion of personal 26 privacy.” Exemption 7(C) covers “records or information compiled for law enforcement 27

28 ⁶ Plaintiffs do not seek the file numbers.

1 purposes,” and allows withholding files which “could reasonably be expected to constitute an 2 unwarranted invasion of personal privacy.” In this case, the FBI has asserted Exemption 6 every 3 time it has asserted Exemption 7(C).⁷ (Dkt. No 71 at 61-76 (Vaughn Index); Dkt. No. 86 at 7-108
4 (Supp. Vaughn Index).)

5 The FBI applied Exemption 7(C) and 6 to withhold names and identifying information 6 regarding (1) FBI agents and support personnel, (2) individuals who provided information to the 7 FBI, and (3) third parties mentioned in documents. (Dkt. No. 71 at ¶¶ 54-59.) Plaintiffs only 8 challenge the exemptions as to the second and third categories and only with respect to the April 9 30 Memo and the July 2004 Memo (the San Francisco field office’s response to the April 30 10 Memo which declines to open a preliminary investigation into Plaintiffs) contending that the FBI’s 11 conclusory assertion of privacy interests with respect to these documents is untethered to the facts 12 of this case.

13 In applying Exemption C courts must balance the public interest in disclosure against the 14 privacy interests of the third parties involved. See U.S. Dep’t of Justice v. Reporters Comm. For 15 Freedom of Press, 489 U.S. 749, 762 (1989). The district court addressed a similar declaration 16 submitted by David Hardy in Am. Civil Liberties Union v. Fed. Bureau of Investigation, No. 12-
17 03728 SI, 2013 WL 3346845, at *7-8 (N.D. Cal. July 1, 2013), and concluded that the FBI’s 18 general assertions regarding privacy interests of third parties were inadequate to allow the court to 19 balance the privacy interests against the public interest in disclosure. The Hardy declaration here 20 includes the same general statements that “the FBI has determined that the third party interviewees 21 maintain a substantial privacy interest in not having their identities disclosed” and that to alleviate 22 fear of “harass[ment], intimidate[ion] [and threats of] legal/economic reprisal or possible physical 23 harm” “persons interviewed by the FBI must be assured that [their information] will be held in the 24 strictest confidence.” Compare Dkt. No. 71 at ¶¶ 57-58 with ACLU, 2013 WL 3346845, at *8

25 _____
26 ⁷ The FBI’s briefs focus only on Exemption 7(C). In any event, “[t]he standard for Exemption 6 is 27 higher in that it requires the disclosure of the files to constitute a “clearly unwarranted” invasion of 28 privacy, whereas Exemption 7(C) only requires that the disclosure “could reasonably be expected to constitute” such an invasion.” Am. Civil Liberties Union of N. California v. Fed. Bureau of Investigation, No. 12-CV-03728-SI, 2015 WL 678231, at *5 (N.D. Cal. Feb. 17, 2015), appeal dismissed (Jan. 5, 2016).

1 (“the FBI has determined that these third parties have substantial privacy interests in not having 2 information found about them found in records of the FBI’ because in general disclosure carries a 3 ‘negative connotation’ and can lead to ‘possible harassment or criticism.’”). Further, in both 4 cases, Hardy attests without explanation that “[d]isclosure of the third parties’ names and 5 identifying information would not shed light on the operations and activities of the FBI.”⁸
6 (Compare Dkt. No. 71 at ¶ 58 with ACLU, 2013 WL 3346845, at *8 (“disclosure ‘would shed no
7 light on the operations and activities of the FBI,’ and therefore would constitute ‘a clearly 8 unwarranted and unwarranted invasion of their personal privacy.’”).

9 “The privacy interests of third persons whose names appear in FBI files, the public 10 interest in disclosure, and a proper balancing of the two, will vary depending upon the content of 11 the information and the nature of the attending circumstances.” Weiner v. FBI, 943 F.2d 972 (9th 12 Cir. 1991). Plaintiffs believe that the FBI investigated them due to their political viewpoints and 13 that information regarding the scope of this investigation will illuminate this issue. Thus, as in 14 Rosenfeld v. U.S. Dep’t of Justice, 57 F.3d 803 (9th Cir. 1995), “[t]he public interest in this case is 15 knowing whether and to what extent the FBI investigated individuals for participating in political 16 [activity], not federal criminal activity. Disclosing the names of the investigation subjects would 17 make it possible to compare the FBI’s investigations to a roster of the [organization’s] leadership.”
18 Id. at 812. The FBI, however, has failed to provide sufficient information to determine whether 19 the privacy interests outweigh the disclosure interests.

20 Moreover, to the extent that the FBI is asserting Exemption 7(C) over information 21 available in public sources as Plaintiffs contend, the privacy interest must necessarily be less. See 22 ACLU, 2013 WL 3346845, at *8 (“the identities of many [] protestors [] were covered extensively 23 by the news media. These persons’ privacy interests will be less than other individuals who have 24 not become public figures.”). For example, in the April 30 Memo the FBI claimed Exemption C

26
27 ⁸ Hardy makes the same representations with respect to information regarding third parties merely 28 mentioned in the two documents at issue. (Dkt. No. 71 a ¶ 59 (“disclosure of their identities would subject these individuals to possible harassment or criticism and focus derogatory interests and suspicion on them” and “would not shed any light on the operations and activities of the

1 over the following: “indicated that [REDACTED] wrote a page length article reporting on the 2 magnitude and value of American military and economic assistance to Israel. [REDACTED] reported in 3 detail on all types of assistance to Israel citing one of his sources of information as 4 www.antiwar.com.” (Dkt. No. 70-1 at 5.) It is unclear what privacy interest, if any, the 5 undisclosed individual could have in protecting his or her name given that the FBI is merely 6 noting that the individual wrote a presumably publicly available article.

7 c) Exemption 7(D)

8 Exemption 7(D) provides that “records or information compiled for law enforcement 9 purposes” may be withheld if they “could reasonably be expected to disclose the identity of a 10 confidential source.” 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(7). Exemption 7(D) only applies if “the particular source 11 spoke with an understanding that the communication would remain confidential.” U.S. Dep’t of 12 Justice v. Landano, 508 U.S. 165, 172 (1993) (emphasis in original). It is the government’s 13 burden to “make an individualized showing of confidentiality with respect to each source”; 14 confidentiality cannot be presumed. Id. at 174, 178. The FBI has withdrawn its claim of 15 Exemption D with respect to all Category A documents, thus this exemption claim no longer 16 appears to be at issue.⁹ (Dkt. No. 85 at 29 n.9; Dkt. No. 86 at 102-108.)

17 d) Exemption 7(E)

18 Exemption 7(E) protects records compiled for law enforcement purposes from disclosure if 19 those records “would disclose techniques and procedures for law enforcement investigations or 20 prosecutions, or would disclose guidelines for law enforcement investigations or prosecutions if 21 such disclosure could reasonably be expected to risk circumvention of the law.” 5 U.S.C. § 22 552(b)(7)(E). However, “Exemption 7(E) only exempts investigative techniques not generally 23 known to the public.” Rosenfeld, 57 F.3d at 815. The Ninth Circuit recently addressed this 24 exemption in Hamdan v. U.S. Dep’t of Justice, 797 F.3d 759, 777 (9th Cir. 2015), and concluded 25 that the exemption was properly asserted because the withheld information related to the “specific 26

27 _____
 28 ⁹ Except to the extent that the FBI claims Exemption 7(D) over materials in categories B-D which are analyzed below with respect to the adequacy of the Vaughn index and the segregability of the records.

1 means of conducting surveillance and credit searches rather than an application” of “a known 2 technique.” Id. at 777-78.

3 The FBI has asserted Exemption 7(E) over six categories of information: (1) names, 4 numbers, and alpha designator FBI units, (2) FBI file/sub numbers, (3) database information and 5 printouts, (4) investigative documents of specific investigations, (5) dates and types of terrorism
6 investigations, (6) sensitive investigative techniques. (Dkt. No. 71 at ¶¶ 62-65, 78-79, 93-94, 99.)
7 Plaintiffs only challenge the exemption with respect to the April 30 Memo and the July 2004 8 Memo which therefore limits the FBI’s assertion of the exemption to the second and third 9 categories: FBI file/sub numbers and database information and printouts.

10 With respect to the file/sub numbers, the Hardy Declaration attests that 11 the release of file numbering convention identifies the investigative 12 interest, a specific law enforcement technique utilized in the 13 investigations at issue, or priority given to such matters. Apply a 14 mosaic analysis, suspects could use these numbers (indicative of 15 investigatory priority), in conjunction with other information known 16 about other individuals and/or techniques, to change their pattern of 17 activities to avoid detection, apprehension, or create alibis for 18 suspected activities.

19 (Id. at ¶ 78.) Absent is any statement that disclosure would reveal “techniques not generally 20 known to the public.” Rosenfeld, 57 F.3d at 815. Plaintiffs argue that “[p]ublic knowledge of the 21 FBI’s file numbering system includes the common understanding that the first three digits in a file 22 number are used to designate the category of the offense under investigation.” (Dkt. No. 88 at 19 23 n.12 (citing http://newstrench.com/secret-no-more/secret-no-more-fbi-central-records-systems-24 classification/ (listing FBI file codes).) Further, Plaintiffs only seek the first three digits of the file 25 numbers—the category of the offense under investigation—which further weakens the FBI’s 26 argument that disclosure would tip off suspects as to the priority of investigative interest.

27 Likewise, with respect to the databases and printouts, the Hardy Declaration only states 28 that “[d]isclosure of the printouts or information compiled from these search results could enable criminals to employ countermeasures to avoid detection, thus jeopardizing the FBI’s investigative mission.” (Dkt. No. 71 at ¶ 79.) But as with the file numbers, Hardy does not declare that information regarding these databases are not generally known to the public. This omission is

1 fatal to the FBI's Exemption 7(E) claim as is the FBI's failure to "provide non-conclusory reasons 2 why disclosure of each category of withheld documents would risk circumvention of the law."
3 Feshbach v. S.E.C., 5 F. Supp. 2d 774, 787 (N.D. Cal. 1997).

4 Thus, the FBI's declaration is insufficient to allow withholding under Exemption 7(E).

6 Accordingly, the Court DENIES without prejudice the parties' cross-motions for summary 7 judgment on Plaintiffs' FOIA and Privacy Act disclosure claims. The current record does not 8 provide the Court with an "adequate factual basis for [a] decision" regarding the government's 9 invocation of Exemption 7. Lion Raisins, 354 F.3d at 1083; see also Maricopa Audubon Soc'y v.
10 United States Forest Serv., 108 F.3d 1089, 1092 (9th Cir. 1997) (requiring the government's 11 affidavits to be "detailed enough for the district court to make a de novo assessment of the 12 government's claim of exemption."); Doyle v. F.B.I., 722 F.2d 554, 556 (9th Cir. 1983)(requiring 13 the government to "submit[] as detailed public affidavits and testimony as possible"). The parties 14 shall meet and confer to develop a case management plan regarding these claims. The Court sets a 15 Case Management Conference for June 9, 2016 at 10:00 a.m. to discuss the parties' proposed 16 plan(s).

17 3. Adequacy of Vaughn Index and Reasonable Segregation of Records

18 The remaining issue with respect to Plaintiffs' FOIA and Privacy Act disclosure claims is 19 the adequacy of the Vaughn index and the segregability of the records for the Category, B, C, and 20 D documents. The purpose of the Vaughn index is to "afford the FOIA requester a meaningful 21 opportunity to contest, and the district court an adequate foundation to review, the soundness of 22 the withholding." Wiener, 943 F.2d at 977 (internal citation and quotations marks omitted). "[A]n 23 index must identify each withheld document, describe its contents to the extent possible, and give 24 a particularized explanation of why each document falls within the claimed exemption." Yonemoto 25 v. Dep't of Veterans Affairs, 686 F.3d 681, 695 (9th Cir. 2012) (internal citation and quotations 26 marks omitted). While the Vaughn index need not "disclose facts that would undermine the very 27 purpose of its withholding," "it should reveal as much detail as possible as to the nature of the 28 document, without actually disclosing information that deserves protection." Id. In addition,

1 under FOIA, any “reasonably segregable portion of a record shall be provided to any person 2 requesting such record after deletion of the portions which are exempt under this subsection.”
3 Hamdan, 797 F.3d at 778-79 (quoting 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)). “An agency must describe the 4 document or information being withheld in sufficient detail to allow the plaintiffs and the court to 5 determine whether the facts alleged establish the corresponding exemption.” Id. at 780. The 6 agency must identify the documents individually and provide an individualized explanation as to 7 withholding. Id. at 780-81.

8 Here, Plaintiffs object to the Vaughn Index with respect to the documents falling within 9 Categories B through D as described in the Hardy Declaration; that is, all documents except those 10 which directly mention the threat assessment and instead, reference either Plaintiff Raimondo, 11 Garris, or Antiwar.com. Plaintiffs contend that FBI has failed to provide specific information 12 sufficient to allow Plaintiffs to challenge the exemptions, and instead, only provide general 13 descriptions and conclusory explanations as to why groups of documents should be withheld.
14 According to Plaintiffs, this generality is particularly problematic because the FBI has withheld 15 many of the referenced documents in full or with significant redactions which renders it 16 impossible for Plaintiffs to assess the context of the withheld information. Plaintiffs also object 17 that the FBI has failed to provide reasonably segregated portions of responsive records. Plaintiffs 18 note that the FBI has withheld 117 pages in full as covered by one of more exemptions and 104 19 documents with such significant redactions that Plaintiffs cannot evaluate whether the material is 20 properly withheld.

21 In response, the FBI filed a supplemental Hardy Declaration and supplemental Vaughn
22 Index with its opposition/reply brief. The supplemental Vaughn Index is over eight times as long 23 as the prior Vaughn Index. (Dkt. No. 86.) Plaintiffs reasonably object to such a “last minute 24 paper dump” and argue that the supplemental Index is still deficient in at least three respects: (1) it 25 does not provide any additional information to support the FBI’s assertion of any exemption other 26 than Exemption 7(E); (2) it does not identify any specific federal law being enforced in connection 27 with the document for which a law enforcement exemption is claimed; and (3) the additional 28 information related to Exemption 7(E) is boilerplate, with a handful of different “explanations”

1 repeated throughout. However, it is apparent from Plaintiffs' brief that they have not had an 2 adequate opportunity to review and comment on the adequacy of the supplemental declaration or 3 Vaughn Index. Further, in denying the FBI's motion for summary judgment on the FOIA and 4 Privacy Act disclosure claims, the Court has given the FBI guidance as to the level of specificity 5 required. The proper remedy, then, is to have Defendant produce yet another amended Vaughn
 6 Index and then have the parties address the adequacy of this new Index. The parties should meet
 7 and confer regarding this and be prepared to discuss it at the June 9, 2016 Case Management 8 Conference.

9 II. Plaintiffs' (e)(7) Privacy Act Claim

10 The Privacy Act of 1974 "safeguards the public from unwarranted collection, maintenance, 11 use and dissemination of personal information contained in agency records . . . by allowing an 12 individual to participate in ensuring that his records are accurate and properly used." Henke v.
 13 U.S. Dep't of Commerce, 83 F.3d 1453, 1456 (D.C. Cir. 1996) (internal citation and quotation 14 marks omitted). "The Act gives agencies detailed instructions for managing their records and 15 provides for various sorts of civil relief to individuals aggrieved by failures on the Government's 16 part to comply with the requirements." Doe v. Chao, 540 U.S. 614, 618 (2004).

17 A. The Section (e)(7) Claim

18 Section 552a(e)(7) provides that a federal agency may not "maintain [any] record
 19 describing how any individual exercises rights guaranteed by the First Amendment unless 20 expressly authorized by statute or by the individual about whom the record is maintained or unless 21 pertinent to and within the scope of an authorized law enforcement activity." 5 U.S.C. § 22 552a(e)(7). "The purpose of the section (e)(7) First Amendment protection is to prevent collection 23 of protected information not immediately needed, about law-abiding Americans, on the off-chance 24 that Government or the particular agency might possibly have to deal with them in the future."
 25 MacPherson v. I.R.S., 803 F.2d 479, 483 (9th Cir. 1986) (quoting S. Rep. 1183, 93d Cong., 2d 26 Sess., reprinted in 1974 U.S. Code Cong. & Admin. News 6916, 6971).

27 There are two documents at issue on this claim: (1) the April 30 Memo and certain of the 28 11 attachments to the memo (Dkt. No. 70-1 at 2-11); and (2) the September 1972 Memo which

1 details an investigation into a third-party's affiliation with a white hate group and which describes 2 Plaintiff Garris's participation in a "War Crimes Trial." (Dkt. No. 74-7). Plaintiffs seek 3 expungement of both records on the grounds that they describe Plaintiffs' exercise of their First 4 Amendment rights.

5 1. The records describe Plaintiffs' First Amendment activity

6 The FBI does not dispute that the records at issue describe Plaintiffs' exercise of their First 7 Amendment activities—namely, political speech.¹⁰ Rather, the FBI contends it can maintain the 8 documents in its files because they are "pertinent to and within the scope of an authorized law 9 enforcement activity."

10 2. Authorized law enforcement activity

11 In MacPherson, the Ninth Circuit recognized that "[t]here are strong policy considerations 12 on both sides of the issue" of whether to allow law enforcement to maintain records of an 13 individual's First Amendment conduct. 803 F.2d at 483. On the one hand, "[t]he mere 14 compilation by the government of records describing the exercise of First Amendment freedoms 15 creates the possibility that those records will be used to the speaker's detriment, and hence has a 16 chilling effect on such exercise." Id. at 484 (internal quotation marks and citation omitted).
 17 "Blanket allowance of [] incidental surveillance and recording under the guise of general 18 investigation could permit the exception to swallow the rule." Id. (internal quotation marks 19 omitted). On the other hand, "the legitimate investigation and surveillance of suspected criminals 20 and civil offenders inevitably involves observation and recording of the actions of innocent 21 people, sometimes when those people are exercising their First Amendment rights." Id. "To 22 forbid 'incidental' surveillance of innocent people or to require excision of references to such 23 people in surveillance records would be administratively cumbersome and damaging to the 24 completeness and accuracy of the agency records. Blanket prohibition of such surveillance and 25 recording unless the agency was investigating a specific offense or a specific person could thwart

26
 27 _____
 28 ¹⁰ The FBI disputes that some of the attachments to the April 30 Memo demonstrate Plaintiffs' exercise of their First Amendment activities, but the Court declines to address this issue and instead focuses on the applicability of the law enforcement activity exception.

1 agency investigations and seriously undermine agency enforcement operations.” Id. Indeed, the 2 very presence of the law enforcement exception “recognizes that some recording of First 3 Amendment activities will take place.” Id. Thus, McPherson concluded, when determining 4 whether the section 552a(e)(7) law enforcement activity exception applies, a court must “consider 5 the factors for and against the maintenance of such records of First Amendment activities on an 6 individual, case-by-case basis.” Id.

7 a) The April 30 Memo

8 In March of 2004, while conducting research on the Internet an agent with the Newark FBI 9 office discovered a possible copy of the FBI’s post-9/11 watch list on the website Antiwar.com.
 10 (Dkt. No. 70 at ¶ 9; Dkt. No. 70-1 at 3.) This prompted further review of the website and led to 11 discovery of a second 22-page spreadsheet dated May 22, 2002 with “FBI SUSPECT LIST” noted 12 in the header and “Law Enforcement Sensitive” noted in the footer of each page. (Dkt. No. 70 at ¶ 13 9; Dkt. No. 70-1 at 3.) Both spreadsheets contained personally identifiable information of the 14 individuals listed. (Dkt. No. 70 at ¶ 9.) The Newark Office thus conducted a threat assessment of 15 Plaintiffs and Antiwar.com to determine whether they posed a threat to national security. The 16 threat assessment included a review of publicly available articles authored by or referencing
 17 Plaintiffs and Antiwar.com.¹¹ (Id. at ¶ 10.) This threat assessment is memorialized in the April 30 18 Memo. The threat assessment was forwarded to the San Francisco Field Office as it covers the 19 region where Plaintiffs and Antiwar.com are located, with a recommendation that an investigation 20 be opened into Antiwar.com. (Id.) The San Francisco Field Office ultimately declined to open a 21 preliminary investigation. (Dkt. No. 73-5 (the July 2004 Memo).)

22 Plaintiffs do not contend that the FBI was prohibited from reviewing the postings on their 23 _____

24 ¹¹ Plaintiffs challenge the FBI’s assertion in the Campi Declaration of what appears to be a new 25 justification for the threat assessment; namely, that discovery of the watch list raised “the prospect 26 of . . . criminal offenses.” (Dkt. No. 85 at 8:20 (citing Dkt. No. 70 at ¶ 9).) Plaintiffs are correct 27 that the FBI previously represented that the sole basis for the threat assessment was “discovery of 28 one or more lists that contained information about individuals of investigative interest to the FBI on the www.antiwar.com site.” (Dkt. No. 73-3 at 6 (FBI’s Interrogatory response); Dkt. No. 56 at 4:13-24 (Transcript 4/30/15 hearing).) The FBI is thus precluded from arguing that Plaintiffs were in fact being investigated for alleged criminal offenses.

1 website and analyzing the watch list; rather, they take issue with the FBI’s documentation of the 2 exercise of their First Amendment activities. In Plaintiffs’ view “the FBI erred in taking the 3 further step – specifically prohibited by the Privacy Act – of memorializing and maintaining its 4 description of Plaintiffs’ First Amendment protected activity.” (Dkt. No. 88 at 9:19-21.)

5 The Court disagrees. The threat assessment was conducted pursuant to the October 31, 6 2003 Attorney General’s Guidelines for FBI National Security Investigations and Foreign 7 Intelligence Collection (“2003 AG Guidelines”). (Dkt. No. 70 at ¶¶ 5-8; Dkt. No. 70-2). The 8 2003 AG Guidelines authorized the FBI to investigate threats to national security and established a 9 threat assessment as the “lowest legal investigative activity.” (Dkt. No. 70 at ¶¶ 6-7; Dkt. No. 70-10 2 at 16-17.) According to the Guidelines,

11 [t]he FBI may, without opening a preliminary or full investigation, 12 engage in [specified] activities to investigate or collect information 13 relating to threats to the national security, including information on 14 individuals, groups, and organizations of possible investigative interest, and information concerning possible targets of international terrorism, espionage, foreign computer intrusion, or other.

15 (Dkt. No. 70-2 at 17.) Thus, conducting the threat assessment upon discovery of the two 16 spreadsheets on Antiwar.com was consistent with the FBI’s mandate to investigate matters related 17 to national security.

18 In MacPherson, for example, the IRS had conducted surveillance of individuals and 19 organizations it believed were connected with the “tax protester” movement, and in doing so, “IRS 20 agents anonymously attended several conferences and conventions at which MacPherson was a 21 speaker” and took notes of his speeches and purchased tapes of his speeches. MacPherson, 803 22 F.2d at 480. The IRS maintained these notes and tapes in a “Tax Protest Project File” in the 23 Phoenix and Houston district offices. Id. The Ninth Circuit concluded that the FBI had recorded 24 MacPherson’s speeches pursuant to authorized law enforcement activity because the “speeches 25 were given in public and distributed to anyone willing to pay the price of the tape. He was aware 26 and even acknowledged in one of his speeches that he might be speaking to IRS agents in the 27 audience ... and the IRS records of [the speeches] were necessary to give the agency a complete 28 and representative picture of the events.” MacPherson, 803 F.2d at 484.

1 Similarly, here, the FBI reviewed Plaintiffs’ publicly available articles and postings, as 2 well as documents within the FBI’s and other databases, to compile its threat assessment. (Dkt.
3 No. 70-1.) With respect to Plaintiffs’ publicly available articles, as in MacPherson, Plaintiffs had 4 to have been aware of the possibility that their articles and postings could be reviewed by law
5 enforcement. The FBI’s review of these articles and attachment of many to the threat assessment
6 gave them “a complete picture of” Plaintiffs and thus potentially how and why the spreadsheets 7 were on Antiwar.com. MacPherson, 803 F.2d at 484. Plaintiffs’ argument to the contrary—that 8 there was no need for additional context here because unlike in MacPherson the threat assessment 9 was not conducted as part of a broader investigation—is unavailing. The broader investigation 10 here was into how and why the spreadsheets appeared on Antiwar.com. It is difficult to conceive 11 of how the FBI could have responsibly investigated publication of the spreadsheets without having 12 also reviewed the postings on Antiwar.com.

13 Plaintiffs’ concession that the FBI properly reviewed the postings on Antiwar.com and 14 analyzed the watch list, but insistence that the FBI erred in “memorializing and maintaining” the 15 document cannot be reconciled. Such a rule would place the FBI in an untenable position—agents 16 could investigate national security concerns, but they could not document their investigation if 17 doing so would in any way describe exercise of an individual’s First Amendment rights. The 18 Attorney General Guidelines statement that “[t]hese Guidelines do not authorize investigating or 19 maintaining information on United States persons solely for the purpose of monitoring activities 20 protected by the First Amendment or the lawful exercise of other rights secured by the 21 Constitution or laws of the United States,” does not mean that the FBI cannot initiate an 22 investigation wherever doing so would in some way touch upon an individual’s exercise of their 23 First Amendment rights. (Dkt. No. 70-2 at 12-13.) Indeed, MacPherson specifically holds that 24 the FBI can create and maintain documents that describe First Amendment activities. Id. at 484.

25 In sum, the question is whether there is a genuine dispute as to whether the written threat
26 assessment is pertinent to authorized law enforcement activity. There is not. The record 27 establishes that the FBI initiated the assessment based on discovery of the FBI watch list on 28 Antiwar.com rather than the content of Antiwar.com. Even if the Court rejects the Campi

1 Declaration, the April 30 Memo itself states that the threat assessment was conducted because of 2 discovery of the watch list. (Dkt. No. 70-1 at 3.) Indeed, the Memo notes that “[t]he rights of 3 individuals to post information and to express personal views on the Internet should be honored 4 and protected; however, some material that is circulated on the Internet can compromise current 5 active FBI investigations”; thus, while “distribution of the information on [the watch]list[] [is] 6 wide spread” and “[m]any agencies outside of law enforcement have been utilizing this 7 information to screen their employees,” “it is unclear whether www.antiwar.com may only be 8 posting research material compiled from multiple sources or if there is material posted that is 9 singular in nature and not suitable for public release.” (Dkt. No. 70-1 at 9.)

10 The April 30 Memo’s inclusion of articles authored by Plaintiffs and published in sources 11 other than Antiwar.com (such as the Boston Globe) does not create a genuine dispute as to 12 whether the Memo is pertinent to authorized law enforcement activity. The FBI was investigating 13 whether the publication of the watchlist on Antiwar.com posed a national security threat. It makes 14 sense that in conducting that investigation, agents would review public writings of the persons 15 associated with the website. Regardless of whether those articles ultimately shed any light on the 16 investigation, the threat assessment merely documented what was done in the investigation. If the 17 investigation itself is pertinent to an authorized law enforcement activity, the Privacy Act does not 18 regulate what can be done in the course of that investigation or how that authorized investigation 19 may be documented.

20 Finally, the San Francisco Field Office’s declination of the April 30 Memo’s 21 recommendation to open a preliminary investigation into Plaintiffs and Antiwar.com does not 22 mean that the initial threat assessment was not authorized law enforcement activity. (Dkt. No. 86 23 at 104.) Rather, it suggests that the process worked just as it should—the FBI conducted an 24 investigation and concluded that there was not a national security concern.

25 b) September 1972 Memo

26 The September 1972 Memo documents the FBI’s investigation into a third party suspect 27 based on that individual’s involvement with “State Craft” and “Youth Action” militant white 28 supremacy organizations which advocated violent revolution, allegedly threatened to assassinate

1 President Richard Nixon, and advocated other extremist and/or criminal activities. (Dkt. No. 71 ¶
 2 122.) Plaintiff Garris is mentioned only once in the Memo as one of the judges at a “War Crimes
 3 Trial” in which the third party suspect participated; Garris is identified as a member of the Peace
 4 and Freedom party. (Id.; Dkt. No. 74-7 at 18). Plaintiffs do not dispute that at the time the Memo 5 was created it was “pertinent to and within the scope of an authorized law enforcement activity.”

7 The Court thus concludes that the April 30 Memo and September 1972 Memo were each 8 obtained pursuant to authorized law enforcement activity within the meaning of section 9 552a(e)(7).

10 3. Temporal Limitation on the Law Enforcement Activity

11 Plaintiffs next contend that even if the Memos were initially pertinent to authorized law 12 enforcement activity, they must now be expunged from the FBI’s files because they are not 13 pertinent to any ongoing law enforcement activity. The Court is unpersuaded that the law 14 enforcement activity exception is so limited.

15 The DC Circuit—the court that reviews the most FOIA and Privacy Act challenges—16 considered this issue at length in J. Roderick MacArthur Found. v. F.B.I., 102 F.3d 600, 605 (D.C.
 17 Cir. 1996). After analyzing the language of the statute itself, the legislative history, and the policy 18 rationales on both sides, the court concluded that

19 the Privacy Act does not prohibit an agency from maintaining 20 records about an individual’s first amendment activities if the 21 information was pertinent to an authorized law enforcement activity 22 when the agency collected the information. The Act does not 23 require an agency to expunge records when they are no longer 24 pertinent to a current law enforcement activity.

25 Id.; see also Afifi v. Lynch, 101 F. Supp. 3d 90, 107 (D.D.C. 2015) (“the fact that the investigation 26 into the plaintiff is now closed does not render the records invalid under Section (e)(7)”).

27 The court reasoned that the statute’s plain language does not support any temporal 28 limitation on the maintenance of the record. Section 552a(e)(7) states that an agency “shall . . .
 maintain no record describing how any individual exercises rights guaranteed by the First Amendment unless . . . pertinent to and within the scope of an authorized law enforcement

1 activity.” 5 U.S.C. § 552a(e)(7). “[T]he provision, as written, can[not] be read to require that the 2 maintenance of a record, as opposed to the record itself, must be pertinent to an authorized law
3 enforcement activity.” J. Roderick, 102 F.3d at 603. Congress could have said “maintain no 4 record relating to first amendment activities unless doing so would be pertinent to and within the 5 scope of an authorized law enforcement activity” but they did. Id. (emphasis in original).
6 “Information that was pertinent to an authorized law enforcement activity when collected does not 7 later lose its pertinence to that activity simply because the information is not of current interest (let 8 alone ‘necessity’) to the agency.” Id.

9 Further, a preliminary Senate report stated “that the Privacy Act is aimed at ‘preventing 10 collection of protected information not immediately needed, about law-abiding Americans, on the 11 off-chance that Government or the particular agency might possibly have to deal with them in the 12 future.” Id. at 604 (quoting Senate Report No. 1183, 93d Cong., 2d Sess. 57 (Sept. 26, 1974)).
13 The emphasis on collection does not support a secondary inquiry regarding maintenance. J.
14 Roderick, 102 F.3d at 608.

15 Finally, J. Roderick reasoned that imposing a temporal limitation would “place new and 16 daunting burdens, both substantive and administrative, upon the FBI and other government 17 agencies, with little or no gain to individual privacy.” Id. at 604. “If a law enforcement agency 18 were required to purge its files of information regarding an individual so requesting whenever it 19 had closed a particular investigation, then its ability to accomplish its mission would inevitably 20 suffer.” Id. The FBI would undoubtedly be “inundated with requests” to purge records which 21 would pose a significant administrative burden. Id. Moreover, purging such records is unlikely 22 “to contribute appreciably to individual privacy” because there are considerable procedural 23 limitations on the ability of law enforcement to share this information so that “[t]o say that an 24 agency may maintain such information [] is not to say that it may disseminate it.” Id. at 605 (“a 25 federal law enforcement agency (such as the FBI) may disclose information to another law 26 enforcement agency (such as a local police department) only if the head of the latter agency has 27 made a written request to the federal agency that maintains the record specifying the ‘particular 28 portion’ wanted and the authorized law enforcement activity for which it is wanted.”).

1 Indeed, the Ninth Circuit recognized this burden in MacPherson. The court stated that “[t]o 2 forbid ‘incidental’ surveillance of innocent people or to require excision of references to such 3 people in surveillance records would be administratively cumbersome and damaging to the 4 completeness and accuracy of the agency records.” MacPherson, 803 F.2d at 484. Similarly, to 5 require the FBI to comb its records to excise descriptions of First Amendment activities when no 6 longer pertinent to ongoing law enforcement activity “would be administratively cumbersome and 7 damaging to the completeness and accuracy of the agency records.” Id. The Court thus follows J.
8 Roderick.

9 Becker v. IRS, 34 F.3d 398, 408-09 (7th Cir. 1994), does not persuade the Court otherwise.
10 Moreover, the Seventh Circuit has distinguished Becker on the grounds that in Becker, although 11 the government agency at issue asserted that it “maintain[ed] the materials ‘for possible future 12 uses,’ it did not ‘elaborate on how this material would be helpful.’” Bassiouni, 436 F.3d at 725
13 (quoting Becker, 34 F.3d at 409). In Bassiouni, in contrast, the FBI had articulated a law 14 enforcement purpose for maintaining the at-issue materials. So too here. The FBI attests via the 15 Campi Declaration that maintenance of the April 30 Memo will serve to “inform others should 16 future investigative activity be considered related to those mentioned in the April 30, 2004 EC”; 17 “inform ongoing and future investigative activity”; as well as provide “necessary context in which 18 to evaluate new information” if Plaintiffs or Antiwar.com are again brought to the attention of the 19 FBI. (Dkt. No. 70 at ¶ 12.) “The Privacy Act does not give any indication that Congress intended 20 law enforcement agencies to begin from scratch with every investigation. Nor do we believe that 21 Congress meant to deprive such agencies of the benefit of historical analysis.” Bassiouni, 436
22 F.3d at 725. The Court thus declines to adopt Plaintiffs’ restrictive interpretation of the law
23 enforcement activity exception. Summary judgment is therefore entered in the government’s 24 favor on Plaintiffs (e)(7) Privacy Act Claim.

25 III. Plaintiffs’ (d)(2) Privacy Act Claim

26 Section 552a(d)(2) of the Privacy Act requires each agency that maintains a system of 27 records to allow individuals to request amendment of records pertaining to themselves if the 28 records are inaccurate, irrelevant, untimely, or incomplete. Further, under Section (e)(1) the

1 agency shall “maintain in its records only such information about an individual as is relevant and 2 necessary to accomplish a purpose of the agency required to be accomplished by statute or by 3 executive order of the President,” and under (e)(5) an agency shall maintain records “which are 4 used by the agency in making any determination about any individual with such accuracy, 5 relevance, timeliness, and completeness as is reasonably necessary to assure fairness to the 6 individual in the determination.”

7 Pursuant to these sections, Plaintiff Garris seeks amendment and correction of a January 8 2002 Memo which indisputably inaccurately indicates that he threatened to hack the FBI website.
9 Garris also seeks redaction of the portion of the April 30 Memo referencing this false threat. In 10 response to Garris’s administrative request, the FBI conducted an investigation and issued an 11 Electronic Communication (“EC”) to correct the inaccuracies in the January 2002 Memo and the 12 April 30 Memo. (Dkt. No. 71 at ¶ 115.) The EC states that it is a “corrective notification to all 13 FBI personnel” regarding two documents

14 which inaccurately report that ERIC GARRIS [] made a threat to 15 hack the FBI’s website. As detailed herein, Garris did not threaten to 16 hack the FBI’s website on September 12, 2001. Instead, he 17 contacted the FBI San Francisco Field Office (SFFO) to report a 18 threat made against his own website, www.antiwar.com.

19 (Dkt. No. 71-4 at 24.) Garris is not satisfied with this correction and instead contends that the 20 proper remedy is expungement from the FBI files of the January 2002 Memo and excisement of 21 the reference to the false threat in the April 30 Memo.

22 The FBI contends that the records at issue are exempt from Sections (e)(1) and (e)(5) of the 23 Privacy Act because they are maintained in the FBI’s Central Records System (“CRS”) and the 24 FBI has exempted the CRS from various provisions of the Privacy Act pursuant to Section 25 552a(j)(2). It is unnecessary to determine whether the (j)(2) exemption applies because the FBI 26 has corrected the inaccuracies in the January 2002 Memo and the April 30 Memo. The corrective 27 EC explicitly amends the finding of the January 2002 Memo that Garris threatened to hack the 28 FBI. Plaintiff postulates that some future FBI personnel will discover the inaccurate documents, but not the corrective EC, and therefore believe that Garris threatened to hack the FBI. However, the FBI indexed the EC under Garris’ name, email address, and Antiwar.com. (Dkt. No. 71 at ¶

Northern District of California

1 115.) Plaintiffs have not identified any authority which suggests that this response is not sufficient 2 “to assure fairness to” Garris. 5 U.S.C. § 552a(e)(5). Moreover, the EC is more accurate than 3 what Garris seeks because it describes the FBI’s error in the first instance—in other words, it 4 corrects history rather than erases it completely.

5 Summary judgment is therefore entered in the government’s favor on Plaintiffs’ (d)(2) 6 Privacy Act claim.

7 CONCLUSION

8 For the reasons stated above, government’s motion for summary judgment is GRANTED
9 as to Plaintiffs’ third and fourth claims for relief under Sections (e)(7) and (d)(2) of the Privacy 10 Act, respectively. (Dkt. No. 69.) Plaintiffs’ cross-motion for summary judgment on these same 11 claims is therefore DENIED. (Dkt. No. 82.) Both parties’ motions for summary judgment on 12 Plaintiffs’ first and second claims for relief regarding disclosure under FOIA and the Privacy Act 13 are DENIED WITHOUT PREJUDICE. The parties shall meet and confer to develop a case 14 management plan for how to proceed with respect to these claims. The parties shall appear for a 15 Case Management Conference on June 9, 2016 at 10:00 a.m., in Courtroom F, 450 Golden Gate
16 Ave., San Francisco, California to discuss their plan(s). An updated Joint Case Management 17 Conference statement is due June 2, 2016.
